

6-24-2012

Adventures with Künstler and Gallon

Emily A. Francisco
Gettysburg College

Follow this and additional works at: <http://cupola.gettysburg.edu/libinternblog>

 Part of the Library and Information Science Commons, and the Museum Studies Commons

Share feedback about the accessibility of this item.

Francisco, Emily A., "Adventures with Künstler and Gallon" (2012). Blogging the Library. 93.
<http://cupola.gettysburg.edu/libinternblog/93>

This is the author's version of the work. This publication appears in Gettysburg College's institutional repository by permission of the copyright owner for personal use, not for redistribution. Cupola permanent link: <http://cupola.gettysburg.edu/libinternblog/93>

This open access blog post is brought to you by The Cupola: Scholarship at Gettysburg College. It has been accepted for inclusion by an authorized administrator of The Cupola. For more information, please contact cupola@gettysburg.edu.

Adventures with Künstler and Gallon

Abstract

My second week here at the library has gone by just as quickly as the first. With so many interesting projects to work on, I'm keeping busy and learning an array of new things, especially about exhibit curating. This week I've also made sure to take note of new connections between the research I'm doing at the library and my studies in Art History. [excerpt]

Keywords

Musselman Library, Gettysburg College, Exhibits Intern

Disciplines

Library and Information Science | Museum Studies

Comments

The Interns at Gettysburg College's Musselman Library have been capturing their internship experiences since the spring of 2011. Bloggng the Library has evolved since the first post. Early posts up through 2013 are available on Blogger, and more recent posts can be seen on WordPress.

Creative Commons License

This work is licensed under a Creative Commons Attribution-Noncommercial 4.0 License

Blogging the Library

The Interns @ Gettysburg College's Musselman Library

Adventures with Künstler and Gallon

Sunday, June 24, 2012

By: Emily Francisco '14

My second week here at the library has gone by just as quickly as the first. With so many interesting projects to work on, I'm keeping busy and learning an array of new things, especially about exhibit curating. This week I've also made sure to take note of new connections between the research I'm doing at the library and my studies in Art History.

On Tuesday I was originally scheduled to help install the Mort Künstler and Dale Gallon exhibit in the apse, but since Carolyn is out this week the installation process was postponed for next week instead. Eventually I will be drafting the text for the exhibit and also creating the corresponding webpage, so I decided to get a head start on my research.

Through some digging I learned that the collection to be displayed consists of twenty prints, fourteen of Dale Gallon paintings and six of Mort Künstler paintings. Both artists have been highly praised within the genre of Civil War art, and have reputations for historical accuracy in addition to extreme detail. Personally, I had never thought of Civil War art as an artistic "genre" before; I considered the galleries in town to be tourist attractions with a very limited audience of Civil War buffs and military collectors. Now, though, I find it fascinating to look at a genre of contemporary art that focuses on historical events as key subject matter. It reminds me of the Italian Renaissance fascination with classical subjects.

One thing I found especially interesting about Gallon was the role that research and historical understanding play in his artistic method. As described on his website, he actually employs a staff historian to assist in complex research for his paintings. This person is responsible for researching every detail of a subject and for writing a comprehensive historical essay, which accompanies every print made. Furthermore, Gallon himself identifies important people and/or landmarks in the upper and lower borders, so that the collector can better understand the history that inspired the work. As a result, his paintings serve as illustrative accounts of the Civil War, memorializing this pivotal point in American history and educating the public.

Almost like a Gettysburg monument, don't you think? I want to look into Künstler's work some more. I'd like to see how his approach compares with Gallon's studio and research methods.

To read more about these artists, check out the following sites!

Mort Künstler: <http://www.mortkunstler.com/>

Dale Gallon: <http://www.gallon.com/>