Signaletics

Emilia A. Phillips

Gettysburg College

Follow this and additional works at: http://cupola.gettysburg.edu/engfac

Part of the English Language and Literature Commons, and the Poetry Commons

Share feedback about the accessibility of this item.

This is the publisher's version of the work. This publication appears in Gettysburg College's institutional repository by permission of the copyright owner for personal use, not for redistribution. Cupola permanent link: http://cupola.gettysburg.edu/engfac/32

This open access book is brought to you by The Cupola: Scholarship at Gettysburg College. It has been accepted for inclusion by an authorized administrator of The Cupola. For more information, please contact cupola@gettysburg.edu.
Signaletics

Abstract
Signaletics pits the measured against the immeasurable, the body against identity, and the political against the personal. With a defunct nineteenth-century body measurement system of criminal identification as a foundation, the poems move in and out of history, only to arrive at the immediate voice of a speaker, distraught about the death of a child brother, the removal of a father, and the estrangement of the personal with the politics of her country.

Keywords creative writing, poetry

Disciplines
Creative Writing | English Language and Literature | Poetry

Comments
The attached excerpt includes two poems from the book, "Diaspora," and "The Ear: General Form & Separation of the Internal Windings."
Signaletics

Emilia Phillips

The University of Akron Press
Akron, Ohio
Contents

Subject in the Position of the Soldier with No Arms 1

I

Teratoma 5
Vanitas (Latent Print) 7
Entra Tutto 8
Latent Print 12
Triptych: Automata 14
Bertillonage Fragment, I: Taille 17
Blues Dream 19

II

Diaspora 23
Cross Section 26
The Study Heads 28
Bertillonage Fragment, II: Buste 37 Sublimation 38
Ghost Sonnet 44

III

In vacuo, Universal Studios 47
The Speech of Monkeys 50 Post 52
The Ear: General Form & Separation of the Internal Windings 54 Bertillonage Fragment, III: Longueur de la tête & Largeur de la tête 61 Latent Print: Interrogation Helix 62 Cuspis 63
IV

Ars Poetica (Latent Print) 67
Latent Print: Indicia 68 Skin Mags 70
Niedecker's Iron 72
Reading Joyce on U.S. Flight 2309 73 Bertillonage Fragment, IV: Oreille droite 75 Latent Print: Pale Suits 76 Mourner with Cowl, Hands in His Sleeves 78

Notes 83
Acknowledgments 85
Diaspora

When the world goes pearly in the helio range with ash and element, and whatever was understood in corpus is suddenly forgotten—like the reason why I walked into this room—when there is no one, there will be a few, perhaps, in a sleepy orbit. And when they finally lose communication, one will ask nothing, over and over,

Do you read? — Do you read?

Except this will not be the language he speaks in, though the language will be the same as it was before.
One will cry. Another, laugh and slam his brow against the indestructible window until he’s bleeding, forehead split like the mango he once shook from a tree, until the sound that lives on between the panes becomes him, becomes the elegant slander of his life he hears or thinks he hears, eavesdropping, in this way, on the future.

•

If one of you can point to this and say,
This is untrue,
then it is.
When and If are old friends who write but never visit, a withdrawal of the senses from a violent land.

I can’t remember why I am standing on this threshold, every thing before me a cloud beginning to scatter, while gravity
looks through me, down my body
and into my shoes.
The Ear: General Form & Separation of the Internal Windings

Even in the lock a spring is quivering a note  stunned by the unfit precision of my mother's bobby pin & it must be my mother's for she's what's held & kept in its place & what isn't  (How many times she's left the doors unlocked when she was home...) She breaks the pin in the lock—  She's lost her keys again  & the color on her lips...

Once a man came at sunrise into the kitchen asking for a cup of coffee with cream & extra sugar  She heaved the cast iron skillet over her head  & the man's nose like a walnut cracked—congealed grease wobbled & slid from the pan & smacked the linoleum & my legs

I was young a baby  My mother stayed up the whole night...

    listening to the police  radio to my father.

This is Badge 490... the hot pursuits he was in told my mother to get off the air when she called  Kenny, come home.

The dispatcher

•

The morning after my mother breaks into her own home  two joggers find a hen impaled on the wrought-iron fence of the cemetery where her family is  buried dried blood at the hen’s throat a fruit knife opened  to silence its terror  like rust eating a hole

Day Is Done.

It’s nothing

my husband says when I wake him thinking  I hear the floors creak downstairs, or a flowerpot broken for the hidden key.

•
They were all black the old police geldings on the farm my father used to look after whenever the owner took his wife on trips to unswimmable waters cold & turbidly beautiful.

I stood on a pine stump a horse named Robert chewed & held the salt lick for him as long as his tongue would slug its length. One day a white truck with silver trailer arrived while my father was off at the feed store & its driver said he had to take the horses to town for a funeral.

I watched from the stump as the man led one by one the six geldings muzzled grey up the ramp & into the trailer.
I watched too
as he shut the gate, & watched the truck stall before it hawed away.
She has to crawl in through the window when the lock jams & her purse doesn’t jingle with keys settled in the bottom  She takes off her navy pumps & lets them fall

A porch nail catches her hose as she lifts her leg  knee to the ledge  Her hose snaps back now  limp as a half-sloughed snakeskin

   How could I know this?

My mother—states away  on her porch in an irreconcilable dark the streetlights buzzed out & maybe…

no  there’s rain  Ears & ears & ears clot the catalogs of Bertillon—owing to the many hollows and ridges which furrow it  it’s the most important means of identification in the human visage

·

My father wants to buy me an instrument just one but any one I want as long as I promise to play for at least three years

I pick the trumpet because it looks the most confident in its own sound without all the extra keys & reeds just one mouthpiece to slide in & I could imagine my breath blowing through it the paths possible

I could see the pistons shift the puzzle change the tracks I could taste

the metal of my own blood

There's nothing there, my husband says when I say voices are wraithing in through the amplifier when he holds the guitar like that.

He shifts in his seat & the voices focus into volume tuning the strings to a frequency of a CB signal, the local news,
or the stars—

Quiet, now.
I can almost hear what they’re saying…

Even the men in the saddles believe their ears are gold as brittle & brilliant & malleable They don’t hear the guns anymore burning through their powder They wear their hearts under Kevlar & the dead what do they do?

   What do they mean?
They’re waiting under the window flush against the wall setting off silent alarms as they leave in rafts made of the light bones of birds My mother in the morning after wakes to her hand swollen She wraps herself in gauze

She’s given up the name that is my father’s
She says  Good morning

Who’s there?

She hears whispers in her ear & the night’s echoes at the break of day folding their tents like gypsies & as silently stealing away.