From Daphne To Fair Apollo

Pamela J. Thompson
Gettysburg College, ela.thmpsn@gmail.com
Class of 2016

Follow this and additional works at: http://cupola.gettysburg.edu/mercury

Part of the Poetry Commons

Share feedback about the accessibility of this item.

Thompson, Pamela J. (2015) "From Daphne To Fair Apollo," The Mercury: Year 2015, Article 25.
Available at: http://cupola.gettysburg.edu/mercury/vol2015/iss1/25

This open access poetry is brought to you by The Cupola: Scholarship at Gettysburg College. It has been accepted for inclusion by an authorized administrator of The Cupola. For more information, please contact cupola@gettysburg.edu.
From Daphne To Fair Apollo

Keywords
creative writing, poetry

Author Bio
Pamela J. Thompson is an English with a Writing Concentration major and Women, Gender, and Sexuality minor. She is part of the class of 2016.

This poetry is available in The Mercury: http://cupola.gettysburg.edu/mercury/vol2015/iss1/25
From Daphne to Fair Apollo

Pamela J. Thompson

When I was young I played in the woods by the river, splashing my brown rubber boots in the cold, grey water. I pretended I was a nymph, a daughter of Landon, the great serpent dragon poised in far northern sky all year long, watching over me with fierce love and protection, unlike my true father, who spent the whole day locked away in a room in the attic I wasn’t permitted to enter.

I never thought of weddings, instead I reached for my bow and shot an arrow into the side of the house. I was a hunter, a tangle of blonde tied back by a loose ribbon, a shadow in the rabbit’s eye. My face the face of a renaissance woman, stolen from Raphael’s Young Woman with Unicorn my forehead high and wide, pressed out like the full moon, my pale lips thin and downturned, my irises round blue-grey coins, my body growing under me without my permission. I wore the same clothes for years, never noticing how they tightened around my chest and hips.

I never saw you look at me until it was too late. I ran and ran, but growing up by a river, one only learns to swim. Eros shot you with love and me with hate, a burden of lead buried deep in my chest—too deep to be removed so it poisoned me for a decade. I called out to a father who would not hear me, my arms reaching towards the heavens, my hands yearning to grow out like branches, my fingers to leaves,
but no father, no god returned me to nature.
Instead you caught me hard in your rough arms
and carried me across your back to a bed I did not wish to lie on.
When I was young I played in the woods by the river, splashing my brown rubber boots in the cold, grey water. I pretended I was a nymph, a daughter of Landon, the great serpent dragon poised in far northern sky all year long, watching over me with fierce love and protection, unlike my true father, who spent the whole day locked away in a room in the attic I wasn’t permitted to enter.

I never thought of weddings, instead I reached for my bow and shot an arrow into the side of the house. I was a hunter, a tangle of blonde tied back by a loose ribbon, a shadow in the rabbit’s eye. My face the face of a renaissance woman, stolen from Raphael’s Young Woman with Unicorn my forehead high and wide, pressed out like the full moon, my pale lips thin and down turned, my irises round blue-grey coins, my body growing under me without my permission. I wore the same clothes for years, never noticing how they tightened around my chest and hips.

I never saw you look at me until it was too late. I ran and ran, but growing up by a river, one only learns to swim.
Eros shot you with love and me with hate,
a burden of lead buried deep in my chest—too deep to be removed so it poisoned me for a decade.
I called out to a father who would not hear me,
my arms reaching towards the heavens,
my hands yearning to grow out like branches, my fingers to leaves,
but no father, no god returned me to nature.
Instead you caught me hard in your rough arms
and carried me across your back to a bed I did not wish to lie on.

A year later I visited the Galleria Borghese in Rome, the pearl mansion pressed against a stark blue sky and a green hill.
I saw Bernini’s Apollo and Daphne.
She stands apart from him,
body incased in lichen and bark,
panic and joy across her face
as her toes, roots, sink in deep.
She is safe.
Fair cousin, Apollo,
what I would give to be that stone:
to be white marble,
your hands never to touch me.