Epidermis

Victoria A. Blaisdell
Gettysburg College, blaivi01@gettysburg.edu Class of 2017

Follow this and additional works at: http://cupola.gettysburg.edu/mercury

Part of the Poetry Commons

Share feedback about the accessibility of this item.

Available at: http://cupola.gettysburg.edu/mercury/vol2015/iss1/31

This open access poetry is brought to you by The Cupola: Scholarship at Gettysburg College. It has been accepted for inclusion by an authorized administrator of The Cupola. For more information, please contact cupola@gettysburg.edu.
Epidermis

Keywords
creative writing, poetry

Author Bio
Victoria Blaisdell is a sophomore economics major and writing minor.

This poetry is available in The Mercury: http://cupola.gettysburg.edu/mercury/vol2015/iss1/31
I see no significance in the prints upon my fingers nor the lines along my forehead, and the sparse scattering of words that fumble past my lips have fallen on few.

Like the time my mother pressed a mint into my young hand and I sucked and swallowed and I can still feel the panic, the lump, the way I could not breathe or speak; I think I swallowed too many words that day and they have trembled inside ever since, afraid to come out and face the world.

And my skin, like a wall, keeps others out, and keeps me in and I am afraid that you’ll impress me with too much pressure and I’ll burst, the seams of my skin spilling out. So I sew myself up each day, filling slowly, spilling inward
do not drown they all say.

But you poke pinholes, like stars, those pinpricks of light, and I come trickling out, a steady stream of restlessness and thoughts too big to fit the world.
I don’t believe that I was born to be anyone’s everything.
I was born to taste snowflakes to hear the sound of laughter to wrestle with doubt and to relish in the cleansing perfection of rain.

I see significance in the way we are always children, learning life as we go, smashing walls
just to realize—we all fill slowly but we empty in one breath.