Author Bio
Sarah Flynn is a sophomore working towards an English major with a Writing Concentration. She enjoys all kinds of writing—from newspaper articles to poetry. She grew up in southern Massachusetts, and her poem, "Getting Lost," captures the silliness and the sadness of the last carefree summer she spent with her three best friends.

This poetry is available in The Mercury: http://cupola.gettysburg.edu/mercury/vol2009/iss1/14
Getting Lost

We drive for miles
  oblivious to street signs,
  state lines,
  and time
flying by.
Always moving;
going God-only-knows where,
  going nowhere
with hands at ten and two.

We were tired, slightly wet, Laughing and waiting in lines Smelling cotton candy sweet with just a hint of sweat.
Like some burned out junkie, you craved just one more fix, so you jumped out of the raft and ran headlong down the ramp as the park began to close.
It was getting dark and we couldn’t leave you behind, spending a night wandering alone through empty amusements.
We followed you, like we had when we were ten years old.
Then you turned the corner and tripped off the curb, rolling over the pavement and skinning your knees.
You laughed until you cried, looking like the girl I knew years before your father died.
We say, “Let’s drive forever,”
   As day fades into night “We’ve come too far to turn back!”
“We’re far too young to rest now!”
Barreling
   through the darkness
Getting lost.
Driving with one headlight.
