Greg Little (falls asleep)

Alexander T. Englert
Gettysburg College, englal02@cnav.gettysburg.edu
Class of 2009

Follow this and additional works at: http://cupola.gettysburg.edu/mercury

Part of the Poetry Commons

Share feedback about the accessibility of this item.

Available at: http://cupola.gettysburg.edu/mercury/vol2006/iss1/21

This open access poetry is brought to you by The Cupola: Scholarship at Gettysburg College. It has been accepted for inclusion by an authorized administrator of The Cupola. For more information, please contact cupola@gettysburg.edu.
Greg Little (falls asleep)

Keywords
creative writing, poetry

Author Bio
Alexander Englert comes from Littleton, Colorado and enjoys the rugged aspects of life. He is a philosophy major with no idea of what the future holds. In life’s pursuit he prefers the uncertainty of questioning over the discovery of an answer. In his words, "life is a beautiful mess."

This poetry is available in The Mercury: http://cupola.gettysburg.edu/mercury/vol2006/iss1/21
Late at night, Greg Little was (is) not asleep. (A wire string noose hangs from the room’s ceiling fan; his eyes are wide open.) Sobbing, he heard (from years back) his mother and father whispering and felt the carpet under his chin. He had slipped from bed (slips his head through the loop) and eavesdropped on his belly.

“He has a fat, pot belly,” his mother said. The T.V. was asleep so Greg could hear them. Bed!
he thought, shut your ears and eyes!
Dream, dream, dream! The whipping whispering continued to thrash his ear. Sobbing and crying onto the carpet. Sobbing (from a home-made noose) sorrow stuck in his belly and his father was whispering:
“Please, honey, he may not be asleep.”
(Crying eyes are always crying eyes.)
His father murmured, “Let’s go to bed.”

“No! Shut up, let me finish!” A bed, his bed, would absorb his sobbing. Greg sniffled and wiped his nose. His eyes could not shut; deep in each one’s belly the tears would not stop sprouting. “Asleep, please, let me be asleep,” he was whispering because Mommy told him God listened when you were whispering. God did not answer so Greg snuck back into bed (tightened the noose). He fell asleep to a home-made Lullaby, sung by his sobbing mother: “Little Greg is fat and hopeless. His belly, have you seen it? He has such pretty eyes but what good are eyes?”

His father said, “I wish you were whispering, Sarah.” Greg did too. In the belly of the house came ghostly footsteps. (His bed is made.) He was sobbing (he steps on a chair) and waiting to fall asleep while his mother passed his room; Greg’s eyes shut hard (he steps off) and he pretended to dream in bed. Wounded and alone, Greg Little fell (falls) asleep.