Biography

Robert “Bob” H. Fryling came from Danville, PA, as a freshman at Gettysburg College in 1939. He majored in mathematics and graduated in 1943 before serving in the Marine Corps for the next three years. In 1946, he began work towards a Master’s degree at the University of Michigan. However, in the fall of 1947 he was offered a position as instructor of mathematics and returned to Gettysburg. He completed a Master’s degree in Mathematics in 1952, this time at the University of Pittsburgh. The same year he was offered the newly created position of Dean of Men by President Walter Langsam. This position dealt with student life issues such as fraternities, the dorm counseling system, and parking. During the four years Fryling served as dean, the National Interfraternity Conference twice rated the Gettysburg College fraternity system the best in the nation.

Fryling continued to teach mathematics during his time as dean but returned to Pittsburgh between 1956 and 1958 to work on a PhD and in 1972 was granted a Ph.D in mathematics with a specialty in statistics. In 1958, he returned to full time teaching as assistant professor of mathematics. Fryling was granted tenure in 1962 and became an associate professor in 1969. In 1975, he became the chairman of the mathematics department for several years. He retired in 1987 after 40 years of association with the college.

While teaching at Gettysburg College, Fryling was involved in numerous committees and activities throughout different areas of the College. He served on the Executive Committee on Teaching and Learning and was the leader within the mathematics department concerning teacher education serving as the chairman on the Teacher Education-Secondary committee. He sat on the Advisory Committee on Athletics and the selection committee for the Athletic Hall of Honor. He was the advisor for the Interfraternity Council and advisor to Alpha Tau Omega, (of which he was a member as a student at Gettysburg). Other committees on which he served are the Executive Committee, CUB Review Board, the Task Force Committee, and the Homecoming Committee.
