My Last Post!

Abstract

I cannot believe that this is my last post. It seems like only yesterday that I was writing my first post about how my training for the reference desk was going. This semester has been truly wonderful and I have learned so much. Through the many projects that I have taken part in and my final project that I designed myself, it has been an amazing opportunity. Comments

The Interns at Gettysburg College's Musselman Library captured their internship experiences since the spring of 2011. Over time the blog has featured Fortenbaugh, Smith, and Holley interns. They shared updates on semester long projects, responded to blogging prompts, and documented their individual intern experience.

My Last Post!

I cannot believe that this is my last post. It seems like only yesterday that I was writing my first post about how my training for the reference desk was going. This semester has been truly wonderful and I have learned so much. Through the many projects that I have taken part in and my final project that I designed myself, it has been an amazing opportunity.

As a senior employee of the library, I was asked to pick a book to be plated in my honor. It was certainly a hard decision to pick only one book! In the end, I chose Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone. I know that it seems a little cliché, but this book has influenced me as a reader and as a student. I, like many of my generation, read this book as a young child. I have always been an avid reader and this book remained one of my favorites throughout the years. Additionally, I had the opportunity to read this book last semester in a class entitled The Golden Age of Children's Literature. That class meant a lot to me and helped me solidify my plans for after graduation.

With that being said, in the fall I will be attending Simmons College in Boston for a dual master's degree program in Library Science and Children's Literature. I am very excited about this next step and I know that the knowledge and skills that I learned at Musselman Library will help me as I continue my education. Thank you so much to the Reference Department for all your support this semester!
