Biographical Note

Edward Arnold Frederick was born on August 19, 1892 in Baltimore, Maryland. Edward Frederick was the son of Frederick E. Frederick, and Anna A. Frederick. One of four children, Edward had two younger sisters, Edna L. Frederick and Leila H. Frederick, and one younger brother, Harry G. Frederick. Frederick served in the United States military from 1917-1919. He began his service as a private and he later trained with and served in Flight D 216 Aero Squadron in 1917 before becoming part of the 172nd Aero Squadron in 1918. He served overseas in WWI from July 6, 1918 until April 4, 1919. While overseas, Frederick spent time in the U.K and France with the 172nd Aero Squadron. At the time of his enlistment, Edward Frederick worked as an electrician in Baltimore. After World War I, Frederick worked as a proprietor in the battery service before working as a car mechanic later in his life. Edward A. Frederick married at the age of 30 to Anna Quinn, a native of Maryland. The two lived in Baltimore where they raised three children, Mary E. Frederick, Betty A. Frederick, and Edward M. Frederick. Edward A. Frederick died in Baltimore on October 25, 1956 at the age of 64. He was survived by and all three of his children and his wife, Anna, who died in 1961.

Historical Note

WWI served as a time of rapid and impressive development of the air service. The Aero Squadrons in WWI played an important role throughout England and France for the purposes of bombing, pursuit, and surveillance¹. The rapid improvement of Aero Squadrons, training, and aircraft production during WWI later eventually led to the development of the modern United States Air Force. Despite his training, Frederick and the 172nd Aero Squadron were never a part of any major air operations while overseas.
