

3-21-2016

This Month in Civil War History: March 2016

Jeffrey L. Lauck
Gettysburg College

Follow this and additional works at: <http://cupola.gettysburg.edu/compiler>

Part of the Military History Commons, Public History Commons, and the United States History Commons

Share feedback about the accessibility of this item.

---

Lauck, Jeffrey L., "This Month in Civil War History: March 2016" (2016). The Gettysburg Compiler: On the Front Lines of History. 146.
<http://cupola.gettysburg.edu/compiler/146>

This is the author's version of the work. This publication appears in Gettysburg College's institutional repository by permission of the copyright owner for personal use, not for redistribution. Cupola permanent link: <http://cupola.gettysburg.edu/compiler/146>

This open access blog post is brought to you by The Cupola: Scholarship at Gettysburg College. It has been accepted for inclusion by an authorized administrator of The Cupola. For more information, please contact cupola@gettysburg.edu.

---

This Month in Civil War History: March 2016

Abstract

Transcript:

Welcome to The Civil War Institute's This Month in Civil War History for March.

President Abraham Lincoln was inaugurated as the sixteenth President of the United States on March 4th, 1861.

In his address, he appealed to the Southern states, encouraging them to come back into the Union by remarking "though passion may have strained, it must not break our bonds of affection."

In closing, he hoped that "the better angels of our nature" would avoid the oncoming war.

Exactly four years later, President Lincoln hummed a different tune at his second inaugural Address. [excerpt]

Keywords

The Gettysburg Compiler, Civil War, 150th Anniversary, Gettysburg, Civil War Memory, Sesquicentennial

Disciplines

History | Military History | Public History | United States History

Comments

This blog post originally appeared in The Gettysburg Compiler and was created by students at Gettysburg College.

THE GETTYSBURG COMPILER

ON THE FRONT LINES OF HISTORY

---

This Month in Civil War History: March 2016

March 21, 2016

By Jeff Lauck '18

Lincoln's second inaugural address, March 1865. Photograph by Alexander Gardner.

Click the link below in order to listen to "This Month in Civil War History." You can also scroll down to read through the transcript if you would prefer to read it. This report is also airing on WZBT 91.1 FM throughout this month. Thanks to WZBT for their help in producing this piece.

<http://gettysburgcompiler.com/2016/03/21/this-month-in-civil-war-history-march-2016/>

Transcript:

Welcome to The Civil War Institute's This Month in Civil War History for March.

President Abraham Lincoln was inaugurated as the sixteenth President of the United States on March 4th, 1861.

In his address, he appealed to the Southern states, encouraging them to come back into the Union by remarking "though passion may have strained, it must not break our bonds of affection."

In closing, he hoped that "the better angels of our nature" would avoid the oncoming war.

Exactly four years later, President Lincoln hummed a different tune at his second inaugural Address.

In this speech, much shorter than his first, he looked forward to the future.

"With malice toward none, with charity for all" he declared. Lincoln also affirmed that slavery was "somehow, the cause of the war."

On March 8th 1862, The Confederate Navy unleashed its new ironclad the CSS Virginia on the US Navy anchored at Hampton Roads, Virginia.

The next day, The US Navy deployed its own ironclad, the USS Monitor, which fought the Virginia to a draw, ushering in a new age of naval warfare.

That same month, the Confederate Ordnance Lab in Richmond, Virginia accidentally exploded, killing or injuring nearly 70 workers, most of whom were women.

I'm Jeff Lauck and this has been This Month in Civil War History, a coproduction of WZBT and the Civil War Institute at Gettysburg College.