1-1-2012

October Trail

Vanessa C. Curran
Gettysburg College, currva01@alumni.gettysburg.edu
Class of 2013

Follow this and additional works at: https://cupola.gettysburg.edu/mercury

Part of the English Language and Literature Commons, and the Poetry Commons

Share feedback about the accessibility of this item.

Available at: https://cupola.gettysburg.edu/mercury/vol2012/iss1/12

This open access poetry is brought to you by The Cupola: Scholarship at Gettysburg College. It has been accepted for inclusion by an authorized administrator of The Cupola. For more information, please contact cupola@gettysburg.edu.
October Trail

Author Bio
Vanessa is a senior who studied abroad in Panama. An Environmental Studies major, she has been writing poetry since she was little.

This poetry is available in The Mercury: https://cupola.gettysburg.edu/mercury/vol2012/iss1/12
The crushed pine needles produce a scent
That mingles with the perfume
of the girl in front of me.
It is fresh    fresh like color

The air is crisp—
snap of a fresh apple.
My fingers share this story,
White-tipped and numb and

I think of you
Wish for the warmth of your hands.

The wet leaves and unsteady stones
make my steps careful,
my heart alert.
You are not here to catch me
in case I slip    when I slip

The season is changing—“Goodbye, summer!” cry
the birds, the insects.

Autumn, autumn
Muttered; like a song.

She slips on the path,
Slick are the decaying leaves.
The trees stand sentinel and
They watch her    They watch me

What do they see?
A love-sick child;
(I am a child;
immense is their wisdom)
A young one who misses the warmth of another.

The trees are unconcerned, accustomed to the cycle
of beginnings and endings.

Pieces of leaves—
Earth
Stick to the back of her shoes
Travelling back to school.