If There Is a Word for the Moments Between Asleep & Awake, That Is the Title of This Poem
Or: Twilight of the Mind

Merissa Cope

Butterfly my chest and show me open to the world
I am rib and sinew, no more (my molten heart longs to drip free) not worthy of the title of human, not yet allowed to die

Do not sew me up the wind whistling through my ribs feels so lovely chills my molten heart (the wind whistling through my ribs is the lullaby I can finally fall asleep to) go fight your noble battle somewhere else, child of Cain
