Biographical Note

Leo Jarboe

U.S. Navy Veteran Leo Jarboe was born on October 12, 1926 in Gaithersburg Point, Maryland. Growing up in a family of 10 siblings, he often spent time swimming and racing in a pool nearby for the Boys' Club. At the age of 17, during World War II, he decided to join the Navy. After completing training as a gunner, he was assigned to the USS Callaghan (DD-792), which was eventually stationed near Okinawa. On May 25, 1945, a Japanese kamikaze dove down to strike the ship tied to the Callaghan, the USS Indianapolis. The Callaghan shot down the Japanese warplane, and then rescued two of the three Japanese men on the warplane. One died on the ship, but the other survived and was eventually transferred to a POW camp and then released when the war ended. The Callaghan, unfortunately, was struck by another kamikaze attack on July 28, 1945, just a few days before the end of the war and sunk, killing 47 men and one officer. Jarboe survived, and after a few more months of service, decided to rejoin civilian life and was discharged from the Navy. He spent thirty years as a plumbing foreman in the U.S. Capitol building before retiring. His stories of life and growing up live on in his collection and an oral history interview completed with him by Melanie Fernandes '16. A transcript of that interview is available as part of the Gettysburg College Oral History Collection in the Special Collections Reading Room, Musselman Library.

Kaoru Hasegawa 1924 - 2004

Born in 1924 in Nagoya, Japan, Kaoru Hasegawa joined the Naval Academy in 1941. He joined the Naval Air Corps, and trained to become a "Special Attack" pilot, Hasegawa received a mission for a kamikaze attack scheduled for May 25, 1945. The mission failed, when Hasegawa's plane was shot down as it tried to strike the USS Indianapolis. Hasegawa and another airman in his plane survived, and the USS Callaghan's (DD-792) commander Captain Charles Marriner Bertholf sent the Callaghan to rescue them. His companion died, but Hasegawa was transferred to another ship and then to a POW camp in Guam. By 1995, in addition to completing university and getting married, Hasegawa had risen to become President of Rengo Co., Ltd., a corrugated box manufacturer. In 1995, he came contacted with Leo Jarboe while researching the ship that rescued him. Hasegawa started a Naval Exchange Program between United States and Japanese students, where each group would travel to and learn about the other country. He stayed in contact with Leo Jarboe until his death in 2004.

Historical Note

USS Callaghan

Commissioned in 1943 in honor of the deceased Rear Admiral Daniel Judson Callaghan, the destroyer USS Callaghan (DD-792) shot down 12 ships over the course of almost two years. On May 25, 1945, it rescued two Japanese kamikaze airmen. After being stationed near Okinawa, Japan, the Callaghan was only 45 minutes from setting off for home when it was struck by a successful kamikaze attack on July 28, 1945. The destroyer sunk, taking 47 members of the crew with it. It was the last destroyer sunk in World War II.

In 1981, the second USS Callaghan (DDG-994) was commissioned. At the commissioning ceremony, members from the previous ship were honored. It was later decommissioned in 1998.

Scope and Content Notes

This collection consists of many, diverse documents, in both English and Japanese, about the USS Callaghan (DD-792) and other ships, newspaper articles, letters, recollections, and other personal items from Kaoru Hasegawa and Leo Jarboe, reunion and exchange program information, material about the second USS Callaghan (DDG-994), images, and veterans information. This collection would be most useful to a researcher interested in World War II history, kamikaze attacks, or forgiveness after a war ends. While it may not be useful for an overall look at the war in the Pacific or kamikaze attacks in general, it provides a fascinating look at one unique story of bravery and friendship.
