An Earthen Levee

Brendan Raleigh

Arrows glance
off a suit of plate.
It is unpierced,
but, beneath it,
small, steel barbs
scrape and tear through skin with every motion.
The arrows and gashes
go unacknowledged
until death
manages to seep through.

A man stands at the base of a skyscraper.
He pulls a cigarette from his lips, taking in the poison and trading it for a thin film
of composure.
He blows smoke out into the city air.

It is a cold day
and crowded.
A day ago,
all that would have left his mouth was water vapor.

A day ago,
the wind would have blown right through him.

Large brown eyes,
like a young girl's,
stare back at the leaves,
and perhaps through them.

Little hunks of cloven keratin crush puddles of leaves.
Along with the eyes,
they are ignored, as they must be,
and a shot is fired.

A levee was constructed along the river
from the dirt and sediment that had washed over
for many years.

The residents nearby
cannot tell if,
with each wave,
the levee is reinforced
or eroded.

You said the white tree was a hand, and hands were more mouth than mouths were,
your gesture cut short by a look and a whisper at the dinner table.
I wish you had advice for me, Uncle of mine, but prophecy swirls in your head, disordered.
Everything resonates in colors and voices unseen.
Instead, spin me a memoir of a life that didn’t happen; translate into words the things the moon showed to you.
